"Jellyfish.com" was re-branded to "Bing"

Bing is the comparison shopping engine. In September 2007, Microsoft acquired Jellyfish.com. In June 2009, Microsoft re-branded their comparison shopping properties to Bing Cashback.

We recommend that you use Bing which allows users to search for products from multiple vendors and find their prices.

We strongly recommend that you use Bing Data Feed because of recent changes to Jellyfish.com

Jellyfish is called the Internet's first buying engine. Search engines are great for finding information, but you also need a search engine that is perfect for when you want to buy something online.

Enter Jellyfish.com. Sure we make it simple for you to find the right product from a trusted merchant. But they also do something really different too: share revenue with a customer. They appear like a Robin-Hood-like search engine that takes a percentage of the revenue you generate through your buying activity and redistributes it to you. You use Jellyfish.com just like you would any other shopping search engine to find the right product at the best price. But when you actually buy something from a store in our engine, we share at least half of what we earn by connecting you to that store. All customers need to do is sign up for an account to earn cash back. There are no fees or hidden charges
